A WONDERFUL RACE OF WHITE SAVAGES.

Hidder in the heart of Mindoro, in the Philippines, reached only by secret and difficult trails, guarded by fierce men strongly armed, live a race of white people. There seems only one plausible theory of the origin of such a race. Centuries ago the Philippine Islands formed a continuous chain, reaching to the mainland; before volcanic disturbances caused the connecting links in the chain, to disappear and the group to be parted from the countries of the world, and it may have been before that parting that this white people or their forefathers found their way to the island of Mindoro. An upheaval cut them off, we will suppose, from the land that they had left, and there they settled, making the best of the situation.

They shut themselves in, safe from intrusion in their mountain fastnesses. They taught their children and their children's children to resent intrusion. It is a part of their creed to be sufficient unto themselves. And yet, without communication with the big, enterprising world, they have maintained a certain degree of civilisation. They are intelligent, quick to grasp new ideas, peaceful when not attacked, virtuous, industrious and domestic. The knowledge of this strange people came through a Philippine native, whose word is credible. He has seen these people, he has been one of the few to know them and have frequent communication with them. What he told us our informant was upheld by the priest and the President of his province Manuel Castro's (the native's) story is a wonderful one.

A PROUD, EXCLUSIVE PEOPLE.

The Spanish have tried to reach these people several times, but they have gone armed; therefore, they have always met with disaster. The Mindoran's guard system is perfect. The centre of their colony is the main town, of something like 20,000 in population. This is surrounded by a circle of hamlets of 200 or 300 inhabitants each. They are built with only 10 or 15 miles between. When alarm of a hostile approach is received in one of these hamlets runners are sent out to all the rest, thus making a complete chain. The news is carried fast. All the circle of villages is up in arms. Men with strange, ancient weapons are ready.

If the intruder tries to force an entrance a swift, well aimed arrow greets him, its point made deadly with poison. If he should escape this he comes upon an array of these bellicose people armed with spears and knives. The latter are curved like scimitars and are wielded with deadly skill. If you approach with hostility you will fancy these folk to be the most terrible savages. But go in peace and you will find them a people of much advancement, socially, far above the Filipino. They are remarkable for their women are wonderfully handsome. They are tall (as a Filipino reckons height) being over five feet, and are athletic and graceful.

They wear a loose robe, falling from their shoulders and belted with a cord of banana fibre. Their hair is worn some times flowing, sometimes coiled on the top of the head, almost as neatly as a European woman would coil hers. The men are splendid specimens of manhood, being over five feet in height. They wear a short pair of breeches, and are naked above the waist. Many of them have curling hair. All are fair-haired and blue eyed. The colouring of the people, their remarkable intelligence, their skill in certain simple arts, their grace and strength and beauty, their love of sports—all these things were characteristic of the Greeks of ancient civilization. Why, should not these people be an offshoot of ancient Athens?

THEY RESEMBLE THE ANCIENT GREEKS.

They are a pleasure-loving people. Their festivals occur frequently, and there is nothing barbarous about their gaeties. They have all sorts of athletic contests—races and jumping tests and what they call "hop games," a sort of leapfrog. They have wonderfully graceful dancing by the men and women. They also have music, their instruments being mostly made of bamboo. They are adorned on these occasions with all kinds of curious ornaments—pieces of coloured stone, claws of birds, gay feathers and flowers. The women are passionately fond of flowers, and they raise them in little gardens near their homes. They are thoroughly domestic, and they keep their houses as neatly as any model housekeeper of our own country. They are clean in every way, although their homes are simple bamboo houses like those of the brown natives. They use the carbon, and they raise many domestic animals. Pigs were taken there in trade, and now they are flourishing.

They exchange for sugar, rice and coffee their cloth and birds' plumage. Those two articles are the chief merchandise of the mountain people. They grow most of their own food, but have none to sell.

Their dialect is strange to a Filipino, and unlike all the other dialects of the islands. But they are able to converse with civilised man through their knowledge of Spanish; and this has come to them through a happening as romantic as any that one could fancy.

Many years ago there came to them a new ruler. They did not know that he was to be their ruler when he came. He penetrated to their fastnesses, he came unarmed and they admitted him. Then they learned who he was. When only four years old he had been taken from one of their huts by a Spanish surgeon. The mother and father had run at his approach, leaving behind their twin boys. As the parents were too much frightened to return, the Spaniard took the children to Spain. There he educated them and they became Christians. One of them was a law student. So soon as he was old enough, he set out for his native land, taking with him the education and the religion of which his fathers knew nothing. As soon as the people realised who he was they acclaimed him their Sultan.

Ever since he has ruled them, taught and partially Christianised them. They are fast leaving their Mahomedan religion and are taking up the creed which he holds. He lives among them in Spanish style, clinging to many of the customs which he learned in Europe's advanced civilisation. But he will never leave his own people. He has only one purpose, and that is to advance them, to raise them to the level which he has reached. Science, Civilization, Progress.

A WONDERFUL RACE OF WHITE SAVAGES.

Hidden in the heart of Mindoro, in the Philippines, reached only by secret and difficult trails, guarded by fierce men strongly armed, live a race of white people. There seems only one plausible theory of the origin of such a race. Centuries ago the Philippine Islands formed a continuous chain, reaching to the mainland; before volcanic disturbances caused the connecting links in the chain, to disappear and the group to be parted from the countries of the world, and it may have been before that parting that this white people or their forefathers found their way to the island of Mindoro. An upheaval cut them off, we will suppose, from the land that they had left, and there they settled, making the best of the situation.

They shut themselves in, safe from intrusion in their mountain fastnesses. They taught their children and their children's children to resent intrusion. It is a part of their creed to be sufficient unto themselves. And yet, without communication with the big, enterprising world, they have maintained a certain degree of civilisation. They are intelligent, quick to grasp new ideas, peaceful when not attacked, virtuous, industrious and domestic. The knowledge of this strange people came through a Philippine native, whose word is credible. He has seen these people, he has been one of the few to know them and have frequent communication with them. What he told to our informant was upheld by the priest and the President of his province Manuel Castro's (the native's) story is a wonderful one.

A PROUD, EXCLUSIVE PEOPLE.

The Spanish have tried to reach these people several times, but they have gone armed; therefore, they have always met with disaster. The Mindoran's guard system is perfect. The centre of their colony is the main town, of something like 20,000 in population. This is surrounded by a circle of hamlets of 200 or 300 inhabitants each. They are built with only 10 or 15 miles between. When alarm of a hostile approach is received in one of these hamlets runners are sent out to all the rest, thus making a complete chain. The news is carried fast. All the circle of villages is up in arms. Men with strange, ancient weapons are ready.

If the intruder tries to force his entrance a swift, well aimed arrow greets him, its point made deadly with poison. If he should escape this he comes upon an array of these bellicose people armed with spears and knives. The latter are curved like scimitars and are wielded with deadly skill. If you approach with hostility you will fancy these folk to be the most terrible savages. But go in peace and you will find them a people of much advancement, socially far above the Filipino. They are, remarkable for their women are wonderfully handsome. They are tall (as a Filipino reckons height) being over five feet, and are athletic and graceful.

They wear a loose robe, falling from their shoulders and belted with a cord of banana fibre. Their hair is worn some times flowing, sometimes coiled on the top of the head, almost as neatly as a European woman would coil hers. The men are splendid specimens of manhood, being over five feet in height. They wear a short pair of breeches, and are naked above the waist. Many of them have curling hair. All are fair-haired and blue-eyed. The colouring of the people, their remarkable intelligence, their skill in certain simple arts, their grace and strength and beauty, their love of sports—all these things were characteristic of the Greeks of ancient civilization. Why should not these people be an offshoot of ancient Athens?

THEY RESEMBLE THE ANCIENT GREEKS.

They are a pleasure-loving people. Their festivals occur frequently, and there is nothing barbarous about their gaieties. They have all sorts of athletic contests—races, and jumping tests and what they call "hop games," a sort of leapfrog. They have wonderfully graceful dancing by the men and women. They also have music, their instruments being mostly made of bamboo. They are adorned on these occasions with all kinds of curious ornaments—pieces of coloured stone, claws of birds, gay feathers and flowers. The women are passionately fond of flowers, and they raise them in little gardens near their homes. They are thoroughly domestic, and they keep their houses as neatly as any model housekeeper of our own country. They are clean in every way, although their homes are simple bamboo houses like those of the brown natives. They use the carabao, and they raise many domestic animals. Pigs were taken there in trade, and now they are flourishing.

They exchange for sugar, rice and coffee their cloth and birds' plumage. Those two articles are the chief merchandise of the mountain people. They grow most of their own food, but have none to sell.

Their dialect is strange to a Filipino, and unlike all the other dialects of the islands. But they are able to converse with civilised man through their knowledge of Spanish; and this has come to them through a happening as romantic as any that one could fancy.

Many years ago there came to them a new ruler. They did not know that he was to be their ruler when he came. He penetrated to their fastnesses, he came unarmed and they admitted him. Then they learned who he was. When only four years old he had been taken from one of their huts by a Spanish surgeon. The mother and father had run at his approach, leaving behind their twin boys. As the parents were too much frightened to return, the Spaniard took the children to Spain. There he educated them and they became Christians. One of them was a law student. So soon as he was old enough, he set out for his native land, taking with him the education and the religion of which his fathers knew nothing. As soon as the people realised who he was they acclaimed him their Sultan.

Ever since he has ruled them, taught and partially Christianised them. They are fast leaving their Mahomedan religion and are taking up the creed which he holds. He lives among them in Spanish style, clinging to many of the customs which he learned in Europe's advanced civilisation. But he will never leave his own people. He has only one purpose, and that is to advance them, to raise them to the level which he has reached.—Science Sketches.

MESSRS. BISMARCK &amp; CO.

A PARTNERSHIP DISPUTE.

At the Supreme Court this morning the Puisne Judge, His Honour Mr. A. G. Wise heard an action in connection with the firm of Messrs. Bismarck & Co., ship chandlers and commission agents, of 18 and 19, Connaught Road Central, the plaintiffs, comprising Kwong Sui Uing, Kwong Kau Chuen, Lau Chung Ming and Tang Pui Cheung, alias Pui Cheung Tong, trading under the name of Hop Shing Tong, claiming from Kwok Chui Hin, of 18, Connaught Road Central, the sum of $1,000 due on a promissory note given by the defendant to the plaintiffs, and dated 31st May, 1903.

Mr. W. Slade (instructed by Mr. E. J. Grist, of Messrs. Wilkinson & Grist) appeared for the plaintiffs, and the Hon. H. E. Pollock K.C. (instructed by Mr. G. K. H. Bruton) represented the defendant.

At the outset it was pointed out there were several other cases of a similar character, and it was decided that the ruling in the present action would govern the others, his Lordship observing that if an appeal was made it would be on the lot.

In opening the case, Mr. Slade said that plaintiffs were partners with the defendant in the firm of Bismarck & Co., otherwise the Man Wo, carrying on business in Hongkong with a branch at Port Arthur. Plaintiffs were sleeping partners taking no part in the management of the business, which was entirely under the control of the defendant; but for some time past they had been dissatisfied with the way in which the business was carried on and particularly with regard to the accounts from the Port Arthur branch. Towards the end of last year a fire occurred in the northern establishment, and in due course the insurance company paid the defendant the sum of $15,000. At that time he was pressing the Hongkong partners for more funds to enable him to meet the liabilities of the firm, and they not unnaturally wanted some of those liabilities paid out of the amount received from the insurance company. Counsel said he would not enter into the whole of the partnership dispute, but the Hongkong partners did not receive an account of how that money was spent. In the course of discussion, however, the defendant stated that the value of the Port Arthur business was $60,000, and told plaintiffs they need not trouble about paying up a few thousand dollars in Hongkong as he would realize $6,000 for the Port Arthur business. Matters continued unsatisfactorily until, in the early part of the present Chinese year, it was arranged that defendant should take over the branch establishment while plaintiffs should conduct the Hongkong business. They, of course, knew nothing about the Port Arthur branch, and a discussion ensued regarding the price to be paid. After making a liberal allowance for possible depreciation plaintiffs asked $35,000 for the business, while defendant offered $20,000. As the result of further negotiations plaintiff reduced the price to $30,000 and defendant increased his offer to $25,000. They pressed him for the additional $5,000, and defendant said before he could agree to the amount he would have to telegraph to Port Arthur. Subsequently a wire was despatched to the branch office asking for the full value of the whole business, and defendant's uncle, who managed the branch, replied to the effect that it was worth $37,000. Plaintiffs believed that the figure was greatly underestimated, but as it was obvious they could not get more than $35,000 they closed at that amount the defendant paying $2,000 in cash as part payment and bargain money. It was agreed that of the $35,000, $1,000 was to be paid in cash and the remainder in various ways. But the defendant subsequently said he could not pay cash and asked plaintiff if they would take promissory notes for the balance of $9,000. They agreed to do so, the notes being drawn up in the presence of all parties and signed by defendant on the evening of the 30th May. One of those notes for $1,000 was the subject being sued upon in the present action. Counsel remarked that the other side had given notice of a special defence, viz., want of consideration, and it was also apparent that they denied the notes. It was noteworthy, however, that the defence of want of consideration or insufficient consideration was never suggested until a considerable time after the action was commenced.

His Lordship:—As far as I know it was suggested yesterday. Continuing, Mr. Slade said that what was sold was the Port Arthur business, and defendant had got whatever it might have been worth. Therefore, there was consideration for the notes, no matter what the value of that business might have been. And besides the actual value of the assets, which was all that was enumerated in the telegram from Port Arthur there was the value of the goodwill. Therefore, there was no want of consideration. Evidence was then called.

The Hon. Pollock submitted that the time of payment stipulated in the documents had been altered by the plaintiffs without the consent of the defendant, and at present it was only an acknowledgement of what was to be due to the plaintiffs upon taking the accounts of the Port Arthur business. They were not promissory notes.

Defendant and other witnesses having been called, evidence in support was given by Mr. Bruton, the defendant and the Court translator, and the Hon. Pollock having addressed the Court on the facts of the case.

Mr. Slade replied: and His Lordship reserved judgment.

PICTURESQUE PEITAIHO.

(From Our Own Correspondent.)

September and Your correspondent has deserted his post and gone far afield for a holiday and a first visit to the renowned Peitaiho. After seven years' sojourn in the mud plain of Tientsin a little relaxation amid nature's beauties is permissible and distinctly desirable "lest one forget" that there are such things as "hills and rills, and birds' sweet trills, and fragrant flowers." It was ten years since I had seen a hill, and the jagged blue outline of the long range, or series of ranges, of mountains which becomes visible at Fongshan, and wanders away via Shantai-kwan into Manchuria, almost overcame me at first. As we sped on in the train past Tongshan, every mile seemed to reveal some fresh and striking beauty, and one wondered vaguely why so little had been written and said about this lovely region. At Peitaiho the wonder deepens into positive indignation, for very little real idea has ever been conveyed to outsiders by the hundreds of people who, during the past five or six years, have enjoyed Peitaiho as to the real composition of the place. Seen in the soft morning light of a bright, summer day the mind is deeply impressed with the conviction of having seen it all before. Where was it? Lake Geneva, Bay of Naples, some scarce known spot on the Riviera, somewhere in the sunny South of Europe famed for its beauty you have certainly beheld the prototype of Peitaiho, but certainly nowhere in the Far East. In the distance the Changli mountains rise in double tier on such a morning soft blues and greys and pinks against a clear opaque sky, the shore far stretching at their feet pale yellow where the sun kisses the blue waves, fringed above with deep green shrubbery and trees. One striking pale tinted residence stands out against this background like the Castle of Chalon, and is the last building on the western side of the bay, and around it cluster a small settlement of large and comfortable houses known as the west end settlement, and their picturesque outline and warm coloring all help to the general picturesque effect. The shore all round the bay sweeps upwards, a gentle slope of green broken with many gullies and irregularities of rock and rich red earth formation, and all round at intervals are charming little Swiss-like villas and cottages with red roof and green verandas making a truly charming picture. Before the siegely mud houses had been built and very little attention paid to external embellishment, as Peitaiho was then only in its experimental stage. But since, all the houses have been built with an idea to effect as well as utility, and with one or two exceptions they are exceedingly pretty, with red painted gabled roofs, fanciful wooden verandas painted in various colors and quaint low garden walls of big stones cemented together and finished with a coping. The usual design is rather departed from in the house where I am staying which is the newest to the sea at the edge of the rocky cliff, and is a double storied arrangement of four rooms set in a huge veranda all the way round, by which design the inmates score in comfort what they lose in artistic effect. As none of the houses are arranged with any regard to their neighbours they are at all sorts of angles and all sorts of elevations up and down the hill-side. Here a tiny little upstart of a cottage insolently turns its back upon a comparatively palatial neighbour in order to get a completely different view of mountain and sea; there you will see a wee villa designed apparently only for the purpose of preventing the little cot near it of having any view at all. But on the whole they do not get much in each other's way, and the irregularity of the buildings is one of the chief charms of the place. To dream of having them in orderly rows would be a very nightmare if it were possible, which happily it is not, as boulders and ravines abound in all directions and it is emphatically a place in which the adage "cut your coat according to your cloth" has to hold good. It has always been the rule to build bungalows, partly perhaps so as not to obscure others' view, partly perhaps because of the storms which rage here, and also on account of the rather treacherous sandy soil in parts. However, at a conference of the Rocky Point Association (Missionary Pioneers of Peitaiho) it was decided that those buildings within this area may if they choose, build two stories houses. Away in the bay shore yonder there is one very fine house which through the glasses I can see has two stories and an attick, but these mansions are quite the exception.

The one drawback to Peitaiho is the absence of roads. There are no roads and hardly any paths even. You wander where you will find the coolie and residents have worn out a sort of pathway for themselves, but that is all, and in the wet season you cannot wander far without having a streamlet to jump over or to ford, for all the rain courses merrily down hill to the sea, and long distance trips are done mostly on donkeys, very few people owning chairs, and bicycles being out of the question. The whole place is a series of small bays enclosed in one large one the extreme point of one side is West End, and the other Shantai-kwan, Chingwantaoh having an inner bay and miniature cape to itself within the grand circle. The landing place is just within sight of the high grounds at Peitaiho and one can sometimes see the "Ping" boats of the Chinese Engineering and Mining Co. steam in there and go alongside the jetty. The Great Wall crawling over the mountains at Shantai-kwan is also visible with its many gateways on clear days. There has been an exceptional amount of rain this year, but on fine days it is ideally lovely. At the moment of writing it is as nearly an ideal spot as it is possible to find anywhere in China, perhaps anywhere on earth. Next year there will be a good hotel here, and wearied southerners seeking a sanatorium cannot do better than come hither.

France.

M. Combes, speaking at Tregnier, said the Republic was flourishing; abroad the alliance with Russia was assuming a more and more pronounced character of confidence and intimacy; the friendship of France for Italy was being strengthened by reciprocal marks of the most sincere cordiality with Great Britain, with whom would now exist only a rivalry in good methods and friendly demonstrations.

Cabinet Council.

A Cabinet Council lasting three hours was held yesterday; a considerable crowd watched the arrivals; Mr. Chamberlain was greeted with mingled cheers and boos, the former predominating. It is understood that Mr. Balfour submitted to the Cabinet a detailed statement showing the results hitherto reached in the fiscal inquiry. Another meeting will be held to-day.

THE HONGKONG SOCIETY FOR THE PREVENTION OF CRUELTY TO ANIMALS.

With reference to the recently formed society for the prevention of cruelty to animals there seems to be a general impression, more especially amongst the ladies of this Colony, that membership in this Society must necessarily entail the possible annoyance of attendance at the Police Court for the purpose of giving evidence against persons accused of cruelty. We are asked to state that the primary object of the Society is not prosecution, but rather the suppression of cruelty to all dumb animals by the educating of the ignorant by example and precept, and in this way, the ladies of the Colony can very greatly assist the Society both by teaching their children to be kind to animals, and in seeing that their servants do not abuse them. The hope of the promoters of the Society is that, under ordinary conditions, prosecution need only be resorted to in gross and flagrant cases. Every individual is able to give the Society a helping hand and it is greatly to be hoped that those who have hesitated to enrol themselves as members from a reluctance to Police Court appearance will now do so. We would further say that it will, in most cases, be sufficient to inform the Police of instances of cruelty coming under anyone's observation, and they will then undertake the proper means for bringing the culprit to punishment.—Contributed.
